

Admission Policy of the Graduate School of Humanities and Sciences of Nara Women's University

The Graduate School of Nara Women's University aims to cultivate independent scholars of rich individuality by developing interdisciplinary research and education on the base of promoting education and research projects within each specialty. By educating such female students, we want to contribute to the development of such a society that accepts equal participation of both males and females that can also be extended internationally.

The School invites the following kind of students to achieve its aims.

Students who want to undertake most advanced study in their specialty.

Students who want to carry out deep and interdisciplinary research of various problems of the present.

Students who have the will to deepen and re-construct the knowledge of their specialty and to tackle problems that they wish to solve.

Students who aim to contribute to an international society, Asian countries in particular, in the fields of their own specialty.